

Protect your future with Mercury's Insurance for Ride-Hailing Drivers

Ride-hailing Insurance that's right for you.

Driving for Uber, Lyft or another ride-hailing company is a great way to earn a living or just make some extra cash. It's easy and convenient, but did you know that these companies don't provide full coverage for your vehicle if you get into an accident?

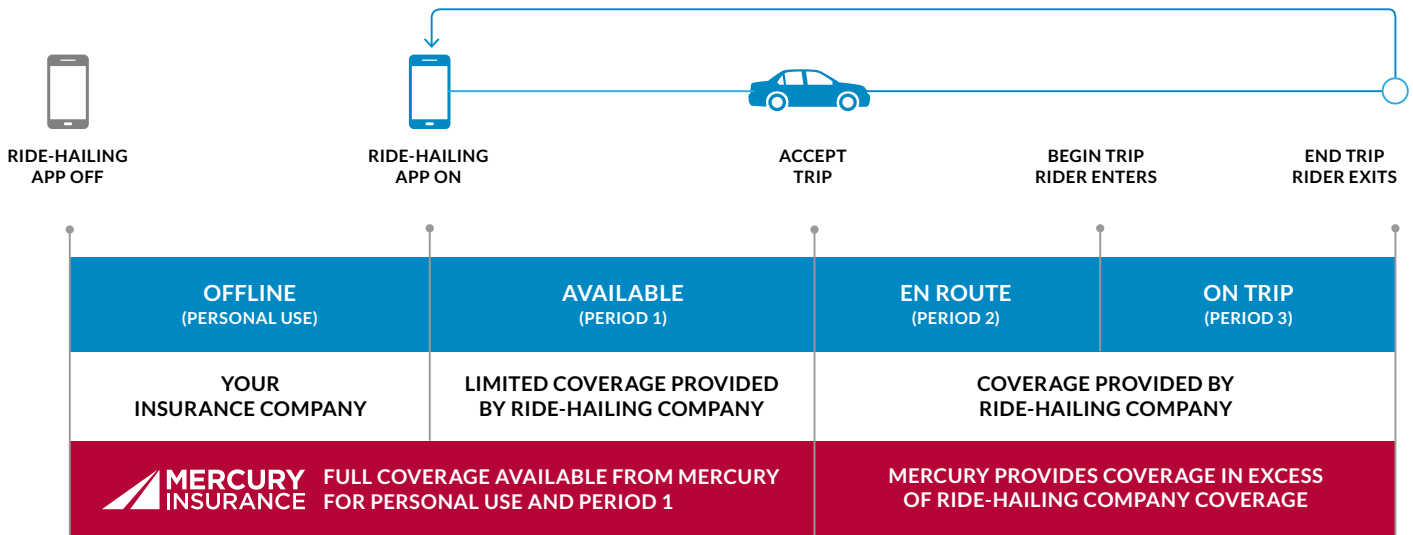

But don't worry, you have a great option! Mercury Insurance can provide the coverage you need, and the best part is that it can cost as little as $0.20 a day! That's right, you can protect your vehicle, family and livelihood for as little as a few pennies a day.¹

Here's how it works.

The company for which you drive only provides limited insurance coverage during the time your ride-hailing app is on, but have not yet accepted a fare (Period 1). Once you accept a fare or are transporting a fare, you will have coverage under the commercial insurance policy from the company for which you drive.

It is very important to understand, however, that your personal auto insurance policy only provides coverage when your ride-hailing app is off. This means that when your app is on and you're looking for a fare, you probably aren't fully covered.

Know Your Coverage

So at this point, you have to ask yourself...do I feel lucky?

Your answer should be no, because what if you get into an accident in Period 1? Who will pay to repair the damage to other vehicles and drivers, and who will pay to fix your car? It definitely won't be your insurance company, and it probably won't be the ride-hailing company's insurance company. It may be you!

Mercury to the rescue!

Our ride-hailing coverage will fill the gaps and provide you with high quality insurance that will not only cover you in Period 1 of the drive cycle, but also provide additional coverage above and beyond your ride-hailing company's insurance in Periods 2 and 3, too! This means that if you get into an accident and you're liable, we'll pay to fix the damage to the other vehicle(s), we'll pay for any resulting injuries, and we'll pay to have your vehicle fixed at one of our amazing repair facilities.²
